

Klára Issová is a Czech actress with Syrian roots. She has starred in more than 80 films and TV series. Her biggest international role was in the Fox/TNT series “Legends” playing the lead love interest opposite Sean Bean and in the National Geographic drama series “Genius: Einstein” where she portrayed Marie Curie.

She won the Shooting Star Award at the Berlinale Film Festival and has been nominated three times for the Czech Lion Film Award, winning the award once.

Klára worked as a stage actor for 15 years including two productions she managed to produce as well as star in. Some of the most important roles she portrayed on stage were:

Stella in A Streetcar Named Desire

Alice in Closer

Catherine in A View From The Bridge

Lady Anne in Richard the Third

Klára graduated from Prague's Conservatory of Dramatic Art. She worked with the acting and English language coach Joe Weintraub for two years and workshopped with Bernard Hiller, another acting coach, while staying in Los Angeles. She also participated in several physical workshops such as pantomime, improvisation, and dance flow to extend her knowledge of working with the body and follow its impulses. Recently she has been working with voice teacher Ivana Vostárková.

Klára always works to extend her skills to achieve authenticity and a deeper impression from her roles. She brings sincerity, openness, and joy to her work and finds satisfaction in preparing extensively to embody her characters.

She likes to spend time in nature taking long walks, enjoys salsa dance lessons, and personal fitness training. Klára also takes care of her garden where she grows her fruit and vegetables.
